

the sky a silver
dissonance by the correct fingers of April
resolved

into a
clutter of trite jewels

now like a moth with stumbling wings flutters and flops along the grass collides with trees and houses and finally,

butts into the river